Why Professional Video Conferencing?

Whether you're presenting from your office, your home, or your hotel room—you need to look and sound your very best. Professional Video Conferencing provides everything you need to avoid video call disasters such as unflattering angles, poor lighting, and inadequate camera positioning. The best setups help you look your best from any location:

Flattering Camera Angles

Using a laptop camera for video calls can lead to unflattering camera angles that keep you from looking your professional best. Using an external webcam with a mount that adjusts to the right height for your face will eliminate unfavorable facial views and allow you to make direct eye contact with your colleagues and customers.

A Captivating Voice

No one should sound like they are presenting from a dungeon. Professionals never record their voice using their computer's microphone because the sound is hollow and muffled. Using a professional microphone will add clarity to your voice and ensure that your thoughts are heard.

Illuminating Lighting

Face it—most room lighting does not help you look your best. Using a ring-light optimized for these environments and for video conferencing applications will complement your facial features without washing you out.

A Focused Audio Experience

Background noise is distracting. If you're working in a busy environment, it can be difficult for you to focus when there is too much going on around you. Using a professional noise-canceling device will help you give your full attention to customers and colleagues.

Seamless Audio Transitions

Echoes and audio lags are annoying and unprofessional. Using a professional audio switch will allow you to mute unused channels and quickly transition between different audio sources.

Professional Video Conferencing is a powerful experience...customized by you and powered by Kensington. It is everything you need to spend more time professionally presenting yourself, and less time setting up or troubleshooting.
